Who we are

Our disaster management team has been on the ground for nearly every major natural disaster in recent U.S. history. Over the last two decades we have successfully helped communities prepare for, respond to, and recover from hurricanes, flooding, wildfires, and a pandemic. From Puerto Rico to Texas, Louisiana, Oregon, and many stops in between, we have successfully supported recovery efforts and exceeded client requirements to help build more resilient communities. We are well-known and trusted by federal, state, and local partners for assisting them to accelerate community-wide recovery, build local capacity for long-term resilience, and deliver cross-sector solutions.

What we do—and how we do it differently

We bring together best-in-class implementation, compliance, environmental review, construction management, risk management, data reporting, and grants management staff to provide solutions for swift resolution to our clients' most complex problems. With a demonstrated track record of driving results, we can help you navigate the complicated recovery funding and mitigation landscape. Let ICF show you how to maximize every dollar to achieve your goals and provide your community a more resilient future when facing future natural disasters.

Prepare and plan

Use preparedness, planning, insurance, adaptation, response, and mitigation strategies to reduce risk and vulnerability

Mitigate

Take advantage of federal funding to permanently reduce risk and make the investments you need to flourish

Respond

Manage immediate post-disaster operations—and prepare for the response and recovery efforts ahead

Recover

Leverage funding from federal and private sources to restore infrastructure and rebuild more resilient and sustainable communities

Our clients

Following Hurricane Laura, we're enabling parishes to safely return kids to schools. We're facilitating island-wide recovery, across all 78 Puerto Rican municipalities impacted by Hurricanes Irma and Maria. We're helping to harden over 1,000 miles of Long Island's electric infrastructure damaged by Superstorm Sandy. And following the disasters of 2016, we're supporting the mitigation planning and implementation efforts of multiple states and local entities. Working with federal, state, and local officials—community development agencies and emergency management departments, counties, municipalities, and utilities—to increase the speed at which communities can bounce back after a disaster is some of the most important work we do.

Our people

Our team has guided some of the most complex disaster recovery efforts in modern history, while always keeping in mind that the people are the mission. We bring our integrity and expertise to deliver meaningful support to communities in need while building local capacity for long-term resilience. As we have done across numerous states and territories, including Louisiana, New Jersey, Texas, and Puerto Rico, ICF combines subject matter expertise with local hires to expedite compliant programs that spur economic development and provide lasting recovery.
